DEDICATION

CYNTHIA GERAN

Died: Friday, February 1, 1946

Age: 15 years

A comely maiden here on earth;
A sunny messenger of mirth;

Adored by all—to all a friend,
Eager a helping hand to lend,

Though widespread fame was not her fate,
Her heart could find no room for hate.

Rewarded with a second birth;
For God also discerned her worth.

CHANGE AND PROGRESS are often synonyms. Most certainly change is necessary if progress in any field of endeavor is to be made. And within the past five decades, within the space of a single lifetime, more significant changes leading to progress have taken place than has been true of the space of time covered by all previous recorded history. In the field of transportation the opening of the twentieth century found our nation dependent mainly upon the railroad. Since then the trolley car, busses, automobiles and airplanes have been invented and developed. In the communication field our most efficient medium prior to 1900 had been the telegraph. Within the comparatively short space of fifty years, we have developed the telephone, wireless, radio, television, and radar. In political science, woman suffrage, advanced social legislation, and civil rights bills are only a few of the changes that have completely changed our manner of living. So, too, we will find similar tremendous changes in the fields of science, medicine, business, and all other fields which enter into the science of living.

GEORGE M. DARE

B.S. in Ed., Wharton School, University of Pa.
M.A. in Ed., University of Pennsylvania

Principal of High School

With such changes taking place in all phases of everyday living, it is to be expected that many changes will be found in our public educational systems. We find first that the number of pupils has multiplied many times since 1900. With increased enrollment we find a tremendous change in the terminal objections of our secondary schools. Fifty years ago it was altogether academic; today it is largely vocational. But despite all these changes, there is one respect in which the public schools of today remain the same as they were fifty years ago. That is in the fact that they offer a guarantee to every boy and girl the privilege of preparing themselves to become efficient citizens and in the further fact that they constitute the country's most effective defense against foreign theories which seek our nation's destruction.

Thus we find that each one of us has not only the opportunity but also the responsibility of making the most efficient use of our educational experiences. Our ancestors came to this country largely because of the educational chances for their children. Are we less anxious to preserve the same opportunities for our children?

CLASS POEM

"PAST REFLECTIONS"

At last our high school days are ended,
  Gone are the books and trips and plays;
Past the parties we attended,
  All the so-called "good ole days."

We recall the fun we captured,
  Classroom jokes and puns we shared;
As we face the world enraptured,
  For our destiny prepared.

All but memories have vanished,
  Of the school we loved—each one;
One life done, completely finished,
  The role ahead—not yet begun.

Nancy J. Thompson, '49

SENIOR BALL

• December 5! Senior Ball! Winter Wonderland! These phrases now recall nothing but pleasant memories for the seniors and their guests who whirled merrily around the dance floor in a spirit of joyous ecstasy on that cold December evening.

• With the selection of "Winter Wonderland" as their theme, the decorating committee, headed by Nancy Thompson, worked tediously, combing artistic ability and ingenuity in an effort to transform the gymnasium into a typical winter snow scene.

• While an old-fashioned park scene at the far end of the room lent an air of romance to the atmosphere, snow topped trees and skyscrapers in the distance added sophistication to the setting. Soft blue lights, glimmering through a ceiling of white streamers, created the enchanting effect of falling snow. A huge snowman provided an unusual setting for Art Brown and his orchestra.

• All too soon, however, the final strains of music died away, and the seniors wended their way homeward, still enraptured by the entrancing atmosphere of the Senior Ball.

• The night finally arrived for the presentation of "Henrietta the Eighth." As the nervous seniors, hastily stealing a last minute glance at their scripts, waited in the wings for their cue to go on the stage, vivid memories of preceding weeks of rehearsals flashed swiftly through their thoughts.

• Under the direction of Miss Margaret McKelvey, the students had given their untiring efforts to insure the success of their theatrical venture on November 4 and 5. Consequently, the thunderous applause which filled the auditorium as the curtain came down on the final act of the play helped assure the seniors that they had produced one of the best comedies at B. H. S. in recent years.
